THREE COUNTRIES

THREE PEOPLE

THREE PRISONERS

PROJECT & INTENTION

---

'Incarcerated' is an interactive, experiential installation project portraying political imprisonment in China, Iran and Burma, exhibited through the plight and stories of three human rights activists currently imprisoned within these countries. It will be an audiovisual representation of their unjust incarceration and demonstrate the context of each through an immersive and interactive experience.

The aim of the project is not only to raise awareness for these prisoners and others like them, but to also encourage audience members to actively involve themselves with the call for their immediate release and for human rights reform in these countries. We plan to achieve this through eliciting human understanding amongst audiences towards those incarcerated; emotively involving audience members in the circumstances these people face.

Tun Oo

Tun Oo is a member of the All Burma Student Democratic Front, a resistance group campaigning against the military-led government and for genuine democracy and freedom in Burma. In December 2011, after being arrested in 2010 and held for a year in Insein prison, Tun Oo and fellow pro-democracy student activists Win Myint and Kan Min Thar were charged under fabricated terrorism charges (a common technique of the Burmese government) and sentenced to 13 and 10 years in prison respectively, where they currently remain.

Nasrin Sotoudeh

Sotoudeh is an Iranian human rights lawyer who represented imprisoned Iranian opposition activists and politicians as well as prisoners sentenced to death for crimes committed when they were minors. In September 2010 Nasrin was arrested and placed in solitary confinement on charges of 'spreading propaganda and conspiring to harm state security'. She is currently sentenced to 6 years and has an additional 10-year ban from practicing law by Iranian authorities despite wide call for her release.

Gao Zhisheng

For nearly a decade Gao Zhisheng was one of China's top lawyers. But nearing the Beijing Olympics he became increasingly outspoken about human rights abuses in the country, and in 2008 was arrested by the Chinese government, tortured and his family put under house arrest. His family have since been released, yet Gao's whereabouts were unknown until recently; in prison where he remains to this day.

STRUCTURE

The piece will essentially be a representation of a claustrophobic prison cell environment, doubling as an audio-visual and multi-sensory experience initiated and altered by audience interaction and movement within it. It will gradually portray the stories of the three political prisoners in the aim of raising awareness and promoting action amongst audiences, who will then have access to further information and necessary methods that they can take in the fight for freedom.

The combination of a series of interactively triggered, space-specific mapped projections, surrounding ambient audio and carefully considered layout and décor will work to create an engaging, emotive, educational and effective experience for audiences. It will run for between 3 and 6 days per exhibition, portraying each political prisoner's story on alternate days to ensure all three are equally represented.

We plan to exhibit in a number of venues during 2013, from festivals to gallery and unused spaces. We are currently in the process of application to suitable festivals around the country, and are intending on further exhibition around the south of England (Bristol, Brighton, Bournemouth, etc) throughout 2013.
